Courageous and Impatient Love

Although the soul subjected to interior purifications by the Holy Spirit is profoundly conscious of its own misery and unworthiness, it is nevertheless “sufficiently bold and daring to journey toward union with God.” Whence comes such audacity? From the love which is ever growing within it; indeed, “the property of love is to desire to be united, joined, and made equal and like to the object of its love.” Therefore, the more love increases in the soul, the greater is the longing for union with God. Even if its love is still imperfect—since it has not yet brought the soul to union—nevertheless, it is sincere and thanks to “the strength set by love in the will,” the soul experiences “hunger and thirst for that which it lacks, which is the union” to which love tends. Besides, how could the soul which has grasped something of the infinite beauty and immense love of God not aspire to unite itself to Him? That same divine light which reveals to it the abyss of its own nothingness and that of creatures, enlightens it, by contrast, as to the infinite transcendence of God, so that the soul remains seized and captivated, while God Himself, in the measure that He purifies it, draws it to Himself by infusing new love in it.

Humbled by the knowledge of its own unworthiness, but emboldened by the love which is growing within, and by the invitation which God Himself addresses to it, drawing it secretly to Himself, the soul dares to aspire to this supreme good which is divine union. It is humble in its audacious desire, because it knows that it does not merit such a gift; but it is also daring, because it feels that God Himself wills to give this union, and because its hunger and thirst for God are so great that it cannot live apart from Him. “Why should not the confiding soul venture toward the One whose noble image and glorious likeness it is conscious of bearing within itself?” exclaims St. Bernard. God’s love has gone before it, willing to render it like unto Himself by creation and by grace. This divine resemblance, natural and supernatural, best expresses the desire of God to unite the soul to Himself and, at the same time, constitutes the basis of such union. God, who has established this basis, certainly wills to bring His work to completion; and to do it He only waits for the soul to concur with His action, letting itself be purified, despoiled of self, and clothed completely with divine Life. (taken from Divine Intimacy, written by Fr. Gabriel of St. Mary Magdalen, O.C.D.)

From the Pastor

The Synod on the Family recently came to a close in Rome. The job of the Synod fathers is to advise the Holy Father. Without waiting for what Pope Francis will write about it, I think we can safely say that the family as an institution is in crisis. Years of easy divorce, the widespread use of contraception, cohabitation, and now “same sex” marriage have undermined marriage to the point of collapse. As goes marriage, so goes the family; as goes the family, so goes society. Things are not looking good! Always important to remind ourselves, however, that God’s grace is never lacking to those who desire it and avail themselves of it.

The more we can make our homes “domestic churches” the better our chances of maintaining strong family life, and eventually rebuilding society. What does a “domestic church” look like? It looks something like the church we attend for Mass – not with pews and a choir loft; rather, first and foremost, it has Christ at its center – He is the Lord of the home. In church we pray as a parish family; in the domestic church the family also prays together. In church we are modest and respectful; in the domestic church we are modest and respectful of each other, as well - we don’t yell at one another or call each other names. In church we don’t allow anything offensive to God; we shouldn’t allow anything offensive to Him into the domestic church, either. Let us ask ourselves what is lacking in our homes to make them true domestic churches. Then, let us do whatever is necessary to make them so.

Prayer of St. Gertrude the Great

"Eternal Father, I offer Thee the most Precious Blood of Jesus, with all the Masses being said all over the world this day, for the Souls in Purgatory."

Our Lord showed St. Gertrude a vast number of souls leaving Purgatory and going to Heaven as a result of this prayer, which the Saint was accustomed to say frequently during the day.

St. Gertrude’s life was the mystic life of the Cloister – a Benedictine nun. She meditated on the Passion of Christ, which many times brought a flood of tears to her eyes. She did many penances and Our Lord appeared to her many times. She had a tender love for the Blessed Virgin and was very devoted to the suffering souls in Purgatory. She died in 1334. Her feast day is November 16th.

An Explanation of the Mass November 19, 2015

This evening is the sixth in a series of talks explaining the Holy Mass. Don’t miss out on the spiritual benefits of our Evening of Recollection on Thursday, November 19, beginning with Holy Mass at 6:30 pm. Sponsored by the Confraternity of St. Peter. Everyone is welcome!
