Bear Ye One Another's Burdens

Everyone has some burden, more or less heavy, to bear: physical or moral weakness, the press of duties and responsibilities, fatigue or other troubles which weigh on his shoulders. Everyone feels the need of a friendly hand to help him carry this weight. This hand should be held out to him in fraternal charity, which for the love of God, knows how to be all things to all men. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so you shall fulfill the law of Christ" St. Paul exhorts us. A Christian knows that he is not isolated, but is a member of a unique body, the Mystical Body of Christ. "So we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." This knowledge of his solidarity with the brethren makes a Christian live, not enclosed in the tiny circle of his own interests, but with his heart open to the needs and interests of others. The mystery of our incorporation in Christ is more than an individual fact; by its very nature, it is a social fact. Incorporation in Christ by grace and charity connotes reciprocal incorporation among brethren, like the branches of a vine, which, sprung from the same stock, are so closely united one to another that they live, grow and develop together. Love for Christ is the vital expression of our union with Him; the closer this union becomes, the more our love increases; so too, fraternal charity is the vital expression of our reciprocal union with the brethren in Christ, to such a point that if this charity were not living and operative, we would have to say that our union in Christ and with Christ was very weak or even absolutely null.

If charity and grace unite us to Christ in such intimate and vital relations, it is evident that we must live this union, first with Him who is our Head, and then with our brethren, who like us have also been engrafted into Christ. Hence there will be a supernatural affection which will bind us to one another and make us one heart and one soul, ready to labor and suffer for one another, to help and sustain one another. "Rejoice with them that rejoice; weep with them that weep." Thus the Apostle teaches us to share the joys and sorrows, the cares and anxieties of others as if they were our own. They are, in fact, our own, because they are the joys, sorrows, cares, and anxieties of that one Mystical Body of Christ to which we belong and which, therefore, is ours.

Bearing one another's burdens also means enduring the faults of others calmly and kindly. Faults are the inevitable consequence of human limitations. The Imitation of Christ tells us, "what a man cannot amend in himself or others, he must bear with patience till God ordains otherwise." In the last months of her life, St. Therese of the Child Jesus wrote, "Now I know that true charity consists in bearing all my neighbor's defects, in not being surprised at mistakes, but in being edified at the smallest virtues."

"O Lord, teach me to love my neighbor with all my heart, not merely as myself, but more than myself, thus obeying Your commandment: 'Love one another, as I have loved you.'" ("Divine Intimacy" by Fr. Gabriel of St. Mary Magdalen, OCD)

The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary

The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, taken up body and soul into heaven, was first finished. It first began to be celebrated in the Church after the Ecumenical Council of Trent declared Mary the Mother of God. By the sixth century, the feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary's Dormition, "her falling asleep," was celebrated to celebrate this feast around 650. The Assumption was formally proclaimed in 1950.

In today's society, many idolize the indulgence. In contrast, the celebration of the Assumption of Our Blessed Virgin Mary reminds us of these temporary, earthly attachments, the dignity and destiny of our human body, and the womanhood. It turns our eyes upon the life beyond the grave – eternal life.

May we take heart that one day we will be reunited with God after death. On the feast of Our Mother for the grace to keep our hearts in hers, forever united in the place our heart in hers, forever united in the place brought to the glory of the Resurrection.
