The Mystery of the Cross

Good Friday is the day which invites us more than any other to “enter into the thicket of the trials and pains...of the Son of God,” and not only with the abstract consideration of the mind, but also with the practical disposition of the will to accept suffering voluntarily, in order to unite and assimilate ourselves to the Crucified. By suffering with Him, we shall understand His sufferings better and have a better comprehension of His love for us, for “the purest suffering brings with it the most intimate and the purest understanding;” and “no one feels more deeply in his heart the Passion of Christ than one who has suffered something similar.” With these dispositions let us accompany our Lord during His last day on earth.

The atrocious martyrdom, which within a few hours will torture His body, has not yet begun, and yet the agony of Jesus in the Garden of Olives marks one of the most sorrowful moments of His Passion, one which best reveals the bitter sufferings of His soul. His most sacred soul finds itself immersed in inexpressible anguish; it is extreme abandonment and desolation, without the slightest consolation, either from God or from man. The Savior feels the weight of the enormous burden of all the sins of mankind; He, the Innocent One, sees Himself covered with the most execrable crimes, and made, as it were, the enemy of God and the target of the infinite justice which will punish all our wickedness in Him. Of course, as God, Jesus never ceased, even in the most painful moments of His Passion, to be united to His Father; but as man, He felt Himself rejected by Him, “struck by God and afflicted.” This explains the utter anguish of His spirit, much more sorrowful than the dreadful physical sufferings which await Him; explains the cruel agony which made Him sweat blood; explains His complaint, “My soul is sorrowful even unto death.” Whereas before He had so ardently desired His Passion, now that His humanity finds itself facing the hard reality of the fact, deprived of the sensible help of the divinity, which seems not only to withdraw, but even more, to be angry with Him, Jesus groans: “My Father, if it be possible, let this chalice pass from Me!” But this anguished cry of human nature is immediately lost in that of the perfect conformity of Christ's will to the Father's: “Nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt.”

The Agony in the Garden is followed by the treacherous kiss of Judas, the arrest, the night passed in the interrogations by the high priests and insults from the soldiers who strike Jesus, spit in His face and blindfold Him, while in the outer court, Peter is denying Him. At dawn they commence anew the questionings and accusations; the going back and forth from one tribunal to another begins—from Caiaphas to Pilate, from Pilate to Herod, and back again to Pilate—followed by the horrible scourging and the crowning with thorns. Finally, clothed as a mock king, the Son of God is presented to the mob which cries out: “Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas”; for Jesus, the Savior, the crowd can only shout: “Crucify Him, crucify Him!” Loaded down with the wood for His torture, Jesus is led away to Calvary where He is crucified between two thieves. These terrible physical and mental sufferings reach their climax when the Savior, in agony on the Cross, utters the cry: “My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?” Thus Jesus, who willed to taste to the dregs all that is bitter for man in suffering and dying, teaches us to overcome the anxieties and anguish caused in us by sorrow and death, by acts of complete submission to the will of God and trustful abandonment into His hands.

Some Call Him Lord

In the last, painful moments of Jesus' life on this earth, there were few to witness his dying. In the darkness crouched the faithful women who had attended and loved him. Perhaps one or two of his disciples hidden in the dark. A squadron of Roman soldiers. And, of course, and closest to him in his dying hours, hung two others on their cross of pain. They were thieves, those who stole from people, and ironically flanking the one who was giving his very life for people.

Then while the people and one of the thieves mocked Jesus—it continued to the very end—the other thief pleaded, “Jesus, remember me when you come into your kingdom.” He had, spiritually, come to the altar; he affirmed his need for Jesus; he begged for eternal life through the precise event that was being enacted on the cross not a dozen feet away. The sacrificial lamb was being slain.

The truly stunning words were from Jesus, “I tell you the truth, today you will be with me in paradise.” Jesus always and only told the truth. Today you will be with me in paradise. With the offering of the lamb death itself is crushed. This deed enabled Paul to say, in echoing the words of the prophets Isaiah and Hosea: “Death has been swallowed up in victory. / Where, O death is your victory? / Where, O death, is your sting?”

Often, however, I find myself back at the altar. Like the thief, I whisper in the darkness, “Jesus, remember me.” I need the reassurance that he promised me, “This day you will be with me in paradise.” That is my altar now, enacted during the darkness and solitary suffering of my Savior. I come with no offering other than my need.

The Spiritual Life of Cardinal Merry del Val

In the early part of the 21st century, because of the incessant and often strident media attention to the doings and mis-doings of many highly placed Churchmen, it is good to reflect upon how much good can be accomplished for the greater glory of God and the advancement of religion by even one man of deep holiness who has been placed in a position of great authority and responsibility in the Church.

Such a man was Cardinal Merry del Val. He is best known as the architect and executor of St. Pius X's war against Modernism, for which great service to God he acquired numerous enemies in his lifetime, and for which we can be sure that he gained many friends in Heaven. But his life was not one of merely temporal greatness. He was a profoundly humble and virtuous man as well.

Saint Pius X had as his Secretary of State a man who was eminently worth of his holy pontificate—Cardinal Merry Del Val. In 1931, a year after the death of this illustrious Cardinal, the famous French scholar Rene Bazin made the following observation: “Judgment was passed in many different ways on Cardinal Merry del Val while he was living. But now that he is dead people are getting to know him better, for with death has come the unveiling of the well-guarded secret of his extraordinary spiritual life.”
